

Chapter 2 — Worksheets and Activities

40 prompts

The difference between a worksheet that teaches and one that fills time is whether the difficulty is deliberate. These prompts build practice that ramps — starting where the class actually is, ending where you want them — and activities that run without you standing over them.

What's in here

Group	Prompts	Use when
Practice worksheets	10	Independent practice that builds properly
Learning stations	8	Four ways into one topic, one period
Collaborative tasks	6	Group work where everyone has to think
Review games	6	Before an assessment, without the chaos
Homework sets	5	Work that survives leaving your room
Project briefs	5	Longer tasks students run themselves

Worth knowing before you start

Ask for the answer key in the same request. Getting it separately produces a key that does not quite match the questions.

Say how long students have. A worksheet built without a time limit is always too long.

For anything students do in groups, ask what you should look for while walking around. That line is usually the most useful part of the output.

Key: 6; 6; no because 6:9 is equivalent; pairs 2:3, 4:6, 6:9. Leave two ruled lines after each explanation. This is a four-item excerpt, not a claimed twelve-item complete worksheet.

Stations: draw feeding arrows; read a short supplied chain description quietly; discuss loss of snails; write a conditional prediction. Each produces one individual sentence or diagram. Timing: launch 4; four 9-minute stations; three 2-minute transitions; exit 2 =48. Key: perch directly lose snail food; effects on herons are indirect and conditional. Groups of eight work as four pairs; verify room capacity before using this rotation.

Rank which source could better support a claim and state missing information. Roles: claim-reader, evidence-checker, limitation-finder, synthesis-writer; all prepare individually first. Shared product: claim-evidence-limit table. Individual check: explain why an unknown sample size limits confidence. Do not equate survey format with automatic reliability. Timing: prepare 5, discuss 12, synthesize 8, individual response 5.

Every learner answers silently before discussion. Cards: $x+3=8$; $2x=14$; $3(x-1)=12$; $x+2=x+5$. Key: 5; 7; 5; no solution. Award one point for a correct answer and one for a defensible explanation or corrected explanation. No first-to-answer bonus. Teacher records individual initial responses separately. Timing: rules 3, four 4-minute rounds, reflection 6 =25.

Model: $1/2=2/4$ because each half becomes two fourths. Faded: $2/3= __/6$, since each third is split into $__$ parts; then $3/4= __/8$ with no explanation starter. Independent: $2/5= __/10$; explain whether $3/6=1/2$. Key: 4, 2; 6; 4; yes, both represent half of an equal whole. Support fades from explanation to numeric cue to independent reasoning.

Example — an editorial illustration, not a logged AI run

Fictional wrong claim: $\frac{1}{8}$ is greater than $\frac{1}{4}$ because 8 is greater than 4. Draw equal bars in fourths and eighths. Ask which unit piece is larger and why. Key: $\frac{1}{4}$ is greater; dividing the same whole into more equal pieces makes each smaller. Fresh check: compare $\frac{1}{3}$ and $\frac{1}{6}$. Key: $\frac{1}{3}$ is greater. Do not generalize the unit-fraction rule to unequal numerators without further reasoning.

Questions: triple 8; increase 8 by 3; recipe 2:5 scaled to 6 first units; perimeter of square side 8. Keys: 24; 11; 15; 32. For each, learners name multiplication, addition, ratio scaling or perimeter reasoning before calculating. Teacher key explains why the surface presence of 3 or 8 does not determine the operation. Avoid headings that announce the required strategy.

Without notes: 7×8 ; simplify $\frac{4}{8}$; perimeter of rectangle 3 by 5 units. After an initial attempt, show key: 56; $\frac{1}{2}$; 16 units. Learners correct in a different mark and explain one correction. Teacher records the first response for planning only. A missed fact today is evidence for further practice, not proof of poor effort or permanent inability.
